QUARTERLY JOURNAL OF ECONOMICS
INDEX TO VOLUMES I-XXV
1886-1911

With the issue for August, 1911, the Journal completes a quarter century of publication. An index to the twenty-five volumes is herewith offered. With the completion of the tenth volume, an index was also published; the present index, however, covers the entire series.

Two finding lists are given. The first is an alphabetical author-index, enabling the papers of each contributor to be found at once. The second is by subjects, not by authors, and is arranged under a number of heads and sub-heads, as shown in detail below. Under the several heads the articles are arranged not by authors, but chronologically. It is believed that convenience is secured by bringing together all the papers on a given topic; the lists constitute in some sort a bibliography on the different subjects. The chronological arrangement gives some indication of the course of development in economic thought. Minor notes of only temporary interest have not been included in either index; but other notes have been included, and, when unsigned, have been supplied as far as possible with the names of their writers.

The editors feel satisfaction and some pride in the present conspectus. The contributions published in these columns, especially as they are brought together in the subject-index, show how considerable a part has been played by the Journal in promoting the progress of economic science. Its aim throughout has been to appeal primarily to well-informed readers; to publish papers that promised to advance the science, however abstruse and however likely to be of interest at the moment for only a small circle; to allow investigators all the space needed for stating the results of comprehensive inquiries; to welcome contributions from every school of thought; and, tho making no pretense of being a questions-of-the-day periodical, to offer well-considered articles on current topics. The subscription list of the Journal indicates that its policy has the approval of those interested in the serious problems of economics. Tho necessarily limited in numbers, the subscription list is select in quality, and includes distinguished names in every civilized country on the globe.

The same policy will be followed in the future as has been followed in the past; and the Journal bespeaks the continued support both of its readers and of its contributors.
